BULLPEN BULLETIN

RAZORLINER NOTES

These are strange days in the world of comics. Today there are new universes popping up like mushrooms at the base of a mighty oak. Some of them are ornate with beautiful, vibrant colors, others so formless and bland so as to be virtually indistinguishable from the masses. Some leak poison into the tree, while others lend support.

We've gone a step beyond. We've planted anew.

It's a fledgling universe, birthed from the fertile imagination of Clive Barker, and nurtured by a group of the most enthusiastic and talented newcomers to hit comics in the past ten years. It's the power of the fantastique brought to its farthest limits, and beyond; raw adventure, with an edge. We call it the Razorline.

The Razorline is the culmination of Clive's greatest passions — mystery, fantasy, and fabulism, mixed with generous helpings of the super heroic action that made Marvel famous. Each branches out beyond the farthest limits of what is, into the darkest, most exciting regions of what could be. The leaves weave intricately together to form the fabric of the Decamundi, ten fantastic worlds whose interaction and conflict form the core of the Barkerverse. Good and Evil; Order and Chaos; Life and Death; all opposites contesting for dominance, with a paltry planet known as Earth at their nexus. All of this, and more, under the direction of one of today's most creative talents, all striving to make certain the Razorline titles are like nothing else you've ever seen.

And what great new life will grow from here! Creatures and mythologies undreamt of, side by side with technologies beyond your most fevered imaginings. Even as you read this, the growth continues — with a major crossover planned for later this year, leading into a launch of several more titles in '94.

The seed's been planted — now it's up to you to grab on, and enjoy the ride. Strange days, indeed.

— Marcus McLaurin

The phrase "cutting edge comics" takes on a whole new meaning this month with the debut of the Razorline — four new monthly super hero titles created by that of Hellraiser himself, Clive Barker. The Razorline books — HYPERKIND, ECTOKID, HOKUM & HEX, and SAINT SINNER — were created by the Clivesdale, and then it was up to Epic-urial editor Marc McLaurin to cut the deck and deal them out to various creative teams.

The first slash from the Razorline Universe is HYPERKIND, from those creative cut-ups Fred Burke, Paris Cullins, and Bob Petrecca. Writer Fred describes about a dead kid named Dex who can travel back and forth into the land of the dead. Penciler Steve, enjoying his first ever monthly series, describes ECTOKID as "dark fantasy/adventure with a little bit of horror." Steve notes that ECTOKID is a challenging assignment. "I'm trying to push myself creatively. In drawing the Ectosphere, there are no rules! It's all imagination! Any project I do after this will be a cinch!"

Next we have HOKUM & HEX, which does not feature characters by either of those names. The series, by those cut-throat creators, Frank Lovece, Anthony Williams, and Andy Lanning, is about a failed stand-up comic named Trip Monroe who becomes Earth's champion against invading hordes. Trip has the power to transform things, but his power often backfires, much like one of Marvel's past brushes with Hollywood. HOKUM & HEX will be a light-hearted book, featuring close shaves with demonic rubber chickens and sinister snapdragons. Writer Frank says HOKUM & HEX could best be described as "Aliens meets Dr. Strange meets Comedy Central."

The final cut from the Razorline is SAINT SINNER, a slice of demonic life from Elaine Lee and Max Douglas, which writer Elaine describes as "the weirdest of four very weird books!" SAINT SINNER is the book that answers the question, how many angels can dance on Pinhead's head before their souls are torn apart? Actually, SAINT SINNER is about a normal 16-year old boy who is possessed by both a devil and an angel! Saint Sinner stands between the warring factions of Heaven and Hell, doing his best to answer people's prayers. The prayers of the readers will be answered as the books of the Barkerverse cross over, and more Barker-ific books are added in the future.

Editor Marcus noted that "each Razorline book is unique in its own way. Some are humorous, some are mystical... Everyone has complete freedom to be creative." Marcus feels that the Razorline heroes are a cut above the rest because "they come from the mind of Clive Barker."

Till next time, remember, you may not be able to get a shave and a haircut for two bits any more, but for only 18 bits a pop, you can get a cut from the Razorline!

HYPERKIND as "a teen-age super-team of the 90s. It owes more to X-FORCE than it does to NIGHTBREED." Fred has had much experience tapping the veins of Clive Barker in the past, through various adaptations and a coffee table book or two. (Fred is hard at work on the sequel to his Clive Barker: Illustrator hardcover). Fred says that Poison Clive-y is heavily involved with the Razorline books. "He's as serious about these comics as he is about his major motion pictures."

The next silver from the straight edge of the MacCliver's imagination is ECTOKID, from those razor-sharp rapscallions, James Robinson (writer, issues #1-3), Larry Wachowski (writer, issue #4-on), Steve Skroce, and Bob Dvorak. ECTOKID is
